THE PORTRAITS AT SOUTH KENSINGTON.

The original idea of Lord Derby, when he suggested the Exhibition of National Portraits was, by a chronological arrangement of the pictures in groups, to make art represent general history, while peculiarly illustrating its own. The project has had two important results—it has enabled us to know what kind and degree of such wealth exists in the country, and it has indexed, so to speak, the portrait-painting capacities of successive generations. The three series—of which the present is the last—have brought together 2842 works, from Royal galleries, from ancestral collections, from the choicest cabinets of connoisseurship, from obscure granges and manor-houses, and from private dining-rooms. And we venture to think Lord Derby's principle a wise one—that of admitting the portraits of eminent men, although by inferior artists, with those of persons scarcely known, if the artists were men of genius. It is an old question—in what consists the chief value of a portrait? Is it to be preferred, as a monument of art or as a personal relic and memorial? There is more than one point of view whence to appreciate such a production. When it was said of Johnson's portrait that it rose to be worth 500*l*., while the heads of Sir Joshua Reynolds's fashionable lords could not command 50*l*. each, and when the likeness of the great lexicographer was fought over in the markets of admiration, the honour belonged to the subject, and not to the painter. Suppose a daub in oil were discovered, the most villainous ever perpetrated, yet giving us undoubtedly a hint from life of Shakespeare's features, it would be priceless, and give the dauber to whom Shakespeare sat a perpetual name; but, while that bit of canvas would be cherished beyond the richest and most exquisite Vandyke portrait of somebody forgotten, would the two artists—the sign painter who sketched the poet's countenance and the magician who drew in colour, light, and life—Waller and Dorothy North—be placed, we will not say by criticism, but popularity, upon a level? In every gallery in Europe faces look down from the walls which tell no story except that of a master's power, and also in every gallery of Europe the most wretched failures are preserved, simply for the sake of the interest attaching to the individual delineated. In some portraits the fame of the artist is merged; in others it confers glory upon a commonplace. We may prefer that Raphael, Titian, and Valesquez should not waste their intellect upon human rubbish; but how often has it happened that vanity and stupidity have given the commission, when the part of the contract which was never paid for—the genius that completed it—volunteered itself with an energy which could almost make ugliness immortal, and the lineaments of a Lord Provost sublime? We are far, however, from assigning to portraiture an humble rank among the arts. When good, it is evidence of the quickest, keenest, most vivid artistic eye, of a memory almost electric, of a thorough judgment which leaves out defects while preserving a likeness, and, subordinating mediocre elements, retains minutely all that constitutes character.

There are, this year, in varieties sufficient to test any theory upon the question, 946 examples of the art at South Kensington. They range from the commencement of the century to the present year, through the reigns of the Third and Fourth Georges, the Fourth William, and Victoria; but there is a supplementary collection, which many will consider the most attractive of any, of a miscellaneous character, enriched with splendid specimens from former schools. In the third series proper, however, will be noticed an extraordinary predominance of naval and military uniforms, and in these portraits for the most part difficulties are set before the artist which it is impossible for him to overcome. He has to paint, not simply the human countenance and figures—for these are mere accessories to blazing masses of bullion, scarlet, and plumes, with, not unfrequently, smoke and cannon—flashes in the background, not to mention the insurmountable obstacles of shakos, cocked hats, and other military paraphernalia, which occupy all the eye. Not even Gainsborough could make a picture of George IV. in uniform and stars. But the period was peculiarly liable to this class of portraits. Heroes crowd the earlier space—Abercromby, Troubridge—Nelson's nonpariel—Hutchinson, Collingwood, Gambier, St. Vincent, Moore, and, prominent, of course, Nelson, five times repeated almost in a single group—once by Gainsborough, as a boy in midshipman's uniform, a stiff figure, with an unfascinating face. With a few exceptions, the heroic groups belong to the days of our grandfathers, yet nearer to our memories are dead Wellington, Anglesey, Cochrane, Combermere, Hardinge, Havelock, the three Napiers, with their light, bold heads; Outram, of India; Peel, of the Naval Brigade—a dashing figure and a splendid face—Sale, of the Khyber; Troubridge, parallel with the lion heart who fought at Chevy Chase; Clyde, Seaton, and Codrington. Glancing from one to another of these, widely scattered as they are, there is a temptation to regret the chronological arrangement. You are almost seduced into the fancy of dividing these famous men and women, who have lived and died in our century, into circles apart one from another, not as they flourished and passed away year after year, but as they formed families of genius, which, by a conceit of the mind, may be supposed to sit at the same fireside. Thus, the beauties—"those goddesses, the Gunnings," of whom Selwyn wrote, "I have often seen much handsomer women," by the side of that sweet-faced traitor Emma Hamilton; and Romney's "Perdita" with the Duchess of St. Alban's; but whatever the loveliness that has distinguished our time for two generations past, it has rarely, on account of a change in public manners, become celebrated—that is, become a common topic, except in the case of actresses, whose features adorn many a canvas.

Among the portraits in this class, Romney's of Sarah Kemble, Mrs. Siddons, the comedian's daughter—the failure of 1775, the triumph of 1782—is incomparably the most exquisite. She is drawn to the waist, leaning on her hand, with a wreath in her abundant hair, looking at you, aux yeux, with eyes that speak of something more than tragedy. The same face, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, is magnificent, but not so fascinating. Hamilton's portrait was painted at a different period and suggests a totally different idea, while Harlowe's is so encumbered by stage accessories that the chief personage runs a risk of appearing insignificant. There are two Mrs. Jordans, both utterly unlike that most delicious and graceful mezzotint which used to be familiar in the print-shop windows, which was a wonder of youthful beauty—the one, Gainsborough's well-known picture, reputed to be faithful, though the expression is strangely at variance with what we are told of Dorothy Bland's disposition; and the other, the still better known work of Sir Thomas Lawrence, of which the artist was justly proud. The solitary "Kitty Clive"—we are bringing these ladies together, from the upper and lower stories, since they constitute one exhibition—may well be solitary, for it is Hogarth's, and very innocent she looks, with her childish hand, and in her childish low-necked white dress. It seems a pity that, in obedience to the order of time, Madame Vestris and Miss Glover should be forced into a place between a late Master of the Rolls and Mr. Eyre

BOUND BY RIVIERE.

Evans Crowe. Yet so it is, in accordance with the original plan, which was less designed as an illustration of character than as an illustration of art. It would no doubt, have been pleasant to stand in a painted Poet's Corner at Kensington, for a while comparing the lineaments of Kirke White, the Nottinghamshire butcher's son; Anna Seward, the facile pedant, for whom Scott manufactured a reputation; Hannah More, who thought she was writing real tragedy at Barleywood because Johnson, Burke, and Reynolds had praised her; John Keats, to whom Hilton gave a heavy, sensual face, very much opposed to our ideal of the unhappy surgeon's apprentice; Shelley, Miss Curran's poetical translation of his rather insignificant features; Bloomfield, the tailor's son and shoemaker's apprentice; Walter Scott, of whom the portraits are those by Saxon, Sir Francis Grant, Sir Henry Raeburn, and Leslie; Professor Wilson, Campbell, the Ettrick Shepherd, Hartley Coleridge, Charles Lamb, Horace Smith, Wordsworth—"a noticeable man, with large grey eyes;" "a painter could desire no better study than his fine head, bent over some old volume;" Pickersgill's work, in which he is seen seated under a rock, wrapped in a crimson-lined mantle; Southey, the voluminous—Phillips's—wearing the Laureate's badge; and George Gordon Noel, Lord Byron—also Phillips's—in the conventional black cloth, open collar, and flowing neck-tie. With these Gray, Sir Thomas Lawrence's "Tom Moore," in modern costume, very characteristic but not very interesting; "L.E.L.," so little known under her married name, M'Lean, and who owed so much of her reputation to that unhappy bottle of prussic acid; Walter Savage Landor, the intellectual giant, who grew so savage in his old age; Macaulay, of the Lays; Alexander Pope, too, the linen-draper's son of Lombard-street, descending from his seventeenth and eighteenth century niche to challenge comparison with our later worthies; Prout, who hammered Latinity on the anvil; Talfourd, whose mild talents secured for him an equally gentle sort of fame; Young, of the Thoughts; and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, a splendid medley, after all.

In the artists' cabinet you have a rare group—Reynolds and Lawrence, West and Chantrey Flaxman and his pupil, Bailey, Callcott, always graceful; and the Chalons, brilliant and gay the lords of drawing-room walls; Gibson the "Roman" of the century; Etty, who made so forlorn a pilgrimage to Venice; John Martin, the painter of Babylonian perspectives; Romney, who made the face of Emma Hamilton imitate innocence so prettily; Stanfield, of the sea; and Turner, the master in art, of so many riches; and Sir David Wilkie, the plainest of painters. To suggest only one other set, seated in a studio, far away from the silk-and-lace clusters "of Royalists and regicides and illustrious headless" at Cornbury, and the field marshals and generals from the miniature Versailles of England, and the pompous portraits of nobodies in chains and furs, lent by corporations; suppose in one room, Sir James Mackintosh, of the Highland pedigree that had no beginning, he who embarrassed the artist who went to see him in the House of Commons, by his "incessant and laboured vehemence of voice and manner;" Brougham, when he was young, and of whom with his fellows, the motto might have been in utrumque paratus; Michael Faraday; Brewster with his "optical eye" prying into his kaleidoscope—that children's thing of beauty and joy for ever—the portrait here is Gordon's, not Raeburn's, which we profer; William Roscoe, a full length; Sir Martin Archer Shee, with less character in the intellectual and benevolent countenance than in the half-length by Lonsdale, which represents him, if we remember aright, glancing over his catalogue of Rembrandt's Etchings; and Bentham, by Wattington, who confesses that he drew less from the life than from Brissot's written portrait—"Candour in the countenance, mildness in the looks, severity upon the brow, calmness in the language, coolness in the movements, impurturbability united with the keenest feelings." Gazing at these features we are little inclined to resent their owner's boast—"I am a selfish man; but in me, somehow or other, selfishness takes the form of benevolence." Add to the meeting, from different times and places, and in so wondrously different attitudes, Dr. Arnold, Richard Cobden, John Wilson Croker, Thomas De Quincey, Hallam, Hazlitt, Jameson (member of eighty learned societies), Douglas Jerrold, Lockhart, Joseph Priestley, Pearson, Wilberforce, Whately, Whewell, John Wilkes, and Cobbett, with his farmer's intellect, and where else need we look, upon one horizon, for a variety of types?

Of course, scauniug them all, with their companions in the upper and lower—the really modern and the supplementary galleries—one circumstance obtrudes itself—the disadvantage from which the artist suffers in the contemporary costumes of men, military, official, or every-day; and the advantage he enjoys in the modern costumes of women, as compared with the ruffs and stomachers, the spindle waists and balloon hoops of former periods. Reynolds had the privilege of painting beautiful children, whose dress, when childish, is always charming. Lely had sitters to whom fashion was not an object, or, for that matter, as they generally sat only for their busts, costumes of any kind, so that he is not to be judged, historically, from the wardrobe point of view. Again, these fresh portraits of our own time, or near it, lack, naturally, the ripeness and mellowness of the older schools, whose works have lost their "shininess" without losing their colour. Take even so brief an interval as that marked by Woolnot's Victoria, as a merry-eyed child, and Winterhalter's "Queen," executed in 1842. Is it true, however, that the tone thus rapidly maturing itself, the tints are apt to fade with equal swiftness? Linton, in his work on ancient colours, appears to suggest as much. And, even in Hanbrachen's days—when portrait-painting was worshipped as an art almost divine, that "father of folio," to whom Lodge and Jerdan both owed the designs of their pictured volumes, it was a complaint that pigments were, in their latter times, manufactured only to perish upon panel or canvas. But Lawrence and Reynolds, equally with Hogarth and Vandyke, knew how to choose their tints, when not constrained by the conceits of their sitters. These conceits are noticeable in every portrait collection. They belong to all time. Witness Queen Adelaide, who was hardly ever painted except in a penitential sort of costume; Miss Jane Porter, whose fancy was to wear a dress resembling a shroud; all the Lennoxes—a gallery of Garters; Hobhouse, the "man of linen and starch," to whom Pitt wrote on a card after his maiden speech—"I felt terribly funkt"—and who insisted that "chocolate suited him;" Lord Durham, who continued the fashions of the last century long after they had been abandoned by the Court; Seane, whose manners constituted a museum of antiquities; and Fuseli, who, like Ugo Foscolo, might have been a genius if he had not been a madman.

The artists, in their autobiographies, or through their memoirs, complain terribly of the manners and tempers of the people who sat to them. There is a story told of Audubon, the celebrated bird-hunter and painter of the American Continent, "taking the face" of a Yankee colonel. He said, "Look bright, you ruffian!" The soldier started to his feet in unutterable anger. "That's the expression I wanted," said the artist; "remain as you are and, afterwards, pull my nose whenever you please." Precisely the same absence of characteristic is to be regretted among the historic portraits at South Kensington. Hundreds of them seem not to be true, because they are not animated. Is this the reason, why by almost universal consent, people, looking at the "originals" wonder how Mary Queen of Scots Lady Jane Grey, Nell Gwynne, Anne Boleyn, or Jane Shore could have been called beautiful? But it is high time to cease from asking such questions.

These portraits are styled "historical." In what sense are they so? John Zoffany, a Royal Academician of some repute, painted the countenance and bust of the comic actress Margaret Woffington, commonly called "Peg." The ropedancer's adopted child, who began her professional life by playing the part of a profligate baronet, who rivalled Cibber and Bellamy, and who danced with Garrick on the stage, suggests no more than a thought of talent and purity. Is that, however, the idea of Hogarth's portrait, down to the waist, with the white dress and the broad edge-laced hat? Most distinctly not. And you shall mark similar discrepancies in the cases even of Wellington and Nelson. To what does this circumstance point? To the truth, plainly, that your portrait painter, when he is a man of genius, conveys more of himself than of his sitter to the eye. Let us, while the exhibition at Kensington remains open for yet a few days, indicate, in illustration, the likenesses of Pitt, Fox, and Sheridan; or the great judges although a very high authority lays it down that the portrait of a judge should be "passionless as the face of the dead." The bench at South Kensington is crowded with countenances not passionless at all —Erskine's, Eldon's, Stowell's, Ellenborough's— every one of them full of nature and originality, some grim enough, others humoristic. The medical men exhibit their characteristics with extraordinary strength—Mathew Baillie, Dr. Hunter's assistant, John Abernethy, Sir Charles Bell. Sir James M'Grigor, Sir Charles Mansfield Clarke, and John Constantine Carpue, and William Prout. But, upon the whole, our age, our costumes, ourselves, are not favourable to the art of portrait painting. You may not have hoops, and you may not have wigs—both undeniably barbarous, yet, ascend fromt he lower to the upper gallery, wherein is placed the supplementary collection, and the contrast is seen at once, whether or not it be a contrast of faces or of fashions. There is no difficulty in deciding why the Howards and Somersets of history look picturesque upon canvas, or how the golden-haired beauties of Venice, painted by the picture-making genius of their country, look down in eternal ovoliness from the wall; but is it that the dress or the manner of our age prevents an aspect of much dignity or grace in our contemporary portraits? It can hardly be the dress. The gold diapered and jewelled robes, the high lace ruffs, the medallioned skirts, the enormous sleeves, and the winged epaulets of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries were so uncouth that none except the most adroit artists could render them even tolerable; but they had a taste and a dexterity in the use both of colour and of outline which few of their successors have inherited. As Reynolds never painted truth, and Hogarth never painted beauty, as Wilkie could not attain to the sublime, and as Lely never knew what it was to have modesty sitting before him, so we in our day and generation have a class and school of portrait painters who reflect a feeling of the time, who are pre-Raphaelites in the matter of silks, satins, and ermine—of deputy lieutenants' scarlet and lady mayoress' bracelets—of flat, philanthropic features, and the spurs of impossible heroes; but as for historical portraiture—the grand and majestic art which Italy made epic, and which looks down in poetry upon us from so many a pictured wall, either heroic or sweet, either the beauty of the innocent or the beauty of intellect—this art belongs not to the England of the nineteenth century. We ought to say before concluding that those who wish to be critical upon our criticism will have to visit the galleries at South Kensington within the next day or two.

INTRODUCTORY NOTICE

THE Exhibition of the present year concludes the chronological series suggested by the Earl of Derby. It extends from the commencement of the century to the present time, and includes the last twenty years of the reign of George the Third; the ten years comprising the reign of George the Fourth, and the seven years comprising the reign of William the Fourth; with the first thirty years of the reign of Queen Victoria. As supplementary to the Exhibitions of the two previous years, the present collection also includes the portraits of many distinguished persons who were then either altogether omitted or inadequately represented, with the works of some painters to whose art due justice may not have been hitherto done.

In the first year, the Exhibition was distinguished by the works of the great foreign artists who had practised in this country. In the second year by those of our own painters, the founders of the English School, culminating in the fine portraits of Reynolds and Gainsborough, with numerous examples of their contemporaries and followers. The present year largely represents the works of Sir Henry Raeburn (b. 1756, d. 1823), William Owen (b. 1769, d. 1824), Sir Thomas Lawrence (b. 1769, d. 1830), John Jackson (b. 1778, d. 1831), Thomas Phillips (b. 1770, d. 1845). Sir Martin Archer Shee (b. 1769, d. 1850), Sir J. Watson Gordon (b. 1790, d. 1864), and comprises some fine examples of the works of other eminent contemporary artists, as well as of those who survive and ably sustain the reputation of the existing school of portrait-art.

Early in the century Sir Thomas Lawrence distanced all his competitors in the public esteem, and was, during his long career, the recognised favourite of the Court and the fashionable world. But that he had many worthy rivals for the supremacy he enjoyed, the present collection will afford ample proof; while it will also supply the materials for a just review and appreciation of their respective merits, and will probably determine the future rank of each in the English school. The supplementary portion, representing the works of the chief portrait-painters whose names and art have been known in the country from the earliest times, will no less show the influence of the truthful earnestness of their early art, and the source of many later excellences.

In this latter portion of the collection, the works of many of the eminent painters, whose portraits were so highly distinguished in the two preceding years, find a place—and the present and concluding Exhibition contains, under the conditions already mentioned, a series of works in which the portrait-art of this country may be traced from the time of Holbein to the present day, including the works of Antonio More, Vansomer, Jansen, Vandyck and his followers, with those of our own countrymen, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Romney, Lawrence, and Raeburn —a collection alike interesting to the artist, the antiquary, and all who regard the great men, as well as the distinguished women, who have found a place in the annals of this country.

Though no pains have been spared to obtain the portraits of all who should have a place in the collection, many whose names will at once suggest themselves are absent. It must not be assumed that every eminent man has had his portrait painted. In some cases on application to the family or representatives, they state that there has been no portrait painted; in others, that they know of none, though there is, perhaps, a bust. Again, there are cases where no trace could be found of the family or connexions of persons well known even in the present generation. While in some instances, though it is gratifying to state, they are exceptional, the possessors of portraits hesitated to risk the transport, and entrust to other care remembrances they so greatly prize. On the other hand, possibly some portraits may have been overlooked which should have been included, and might have been obtained for the Collection.

The Exhibition of 1866, the first of the series, comprised 1030 portraits; 866 were exhibited in 1867, and 950 are included in the collection of the present year; so that no less than 2842 portraits, or portrait-groups, have been exhibited in the three years. The plan, as suggested by Lord Derby, has now been brought to the conclusion originally contemplated, and the known portraits of our most eminent men, with few exceptions, as well as the art of our best portrait-painters, have been fairly represented. But it must not be supposed that the stores of portrait-art possessed in this country have by any means been exhausted. The portraits offered when it was too late and impossible to accept them, are some proof of this. Indeed the number seems almost without limit.

The series of Exhibitions may surely claim one great merit, if it prove the means of awakening the owners of pictures, many of which are of national interest, to the true value of their possessions, and lead to greater care that the identity of family portraits is not lost by consignment to the housekeeper's room, or even to the attics; if it saves the portraits themselves from destruction by cruel exposure to the sun till all traces of colour and the finer qualities of the art are hopelessly dried out; or by exposure to damp or changes of temperature, so particularly injurious to early portraits on panel; or, worst of all, subjection to greater danger in the hands of incompetent repairers, who, in the attempt to restore what is irretrievable, destroy the only remains of original art which may have been spared.

It has been the subject of remark that portraits have been exhibited under names, both of the person represented and of the painter, which are obviously wrong. But the portraits are lent under the condition that they shall be exhibited as described by their possessors; and though in some instances errors might be corrected where there is sufficient authority, yet, in many more, opinions differ, and it may well be asked where such a practice should stop, and whose dictum should be adopted. It is only right to say, that the experience of the two preceding exhibitions leads conclusively to the opinion, that the rule adopted is the only safe and just one, and that any interference with names, probably long traditional, would have been extremely distasteful to the owners of the works.

The above collections have included a large number of portraits which have been graciously contributed by Her Majesty; also very interesting portraits from the principal families in the kingdom, with large contributions from the Universities, other corporate bodies, and the chief of our national institutions, including in the present year the fine series of portraits belonging to the Dilettanti Society, which, at the request of the Society, have been appropriately arranged together.

The public who have taken an interest in these Exhibitions, will hardly fail to appreciate the generous kindness by which, for their gratification, and to carry out the enlightened suggestion of Lord Derby, such large contributions have been made from treasured family memorials, and ancient trust depositories.

SCIENCE AND ART DEPARTMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, SOUTH KENSINGTON.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION IN 1868.

THE Lords of the Committee of Council on Education have determined to hold, in the Spring of 1868, a Third and concluding National Portrait Exhibition at South Kensington, in the Arcades overlooking the Royal Horticultural Society's Gardens.

This Exhibition will comprise—1. Portraits of persons (deceased) who lived between the years 1800 and the present time. 2. Portraits of persons living before the year 1800 who were unrepresented or inadequately represented in the two previous Exhibitions. The whole series is based upon the suggestions made by the Earl of Derby, in a letter dated 6th May, 1865, from which the following extracts are made :—

> "I have long thought that a National Portrait Exhibition, chronologically arranged, might not only possess great historical interest, by bringing together portraits of all the most eminent contemporaries of their respective eras, but might also serve to illustrate the progress and condition, at various periods, of British Art. My idea, therefore, would be to admit either portraits of eminent men, though by inferior or unknown artists, or portraits by eminent artists, though of obscure or unknown individuals. I have, of course, no means of knowing, or estimating, the number of such portraits which may exist in the country ; but I am persuaded that, exclusive of the large collections in many great houses, there are very many scattered about by ones and twos and threes in private families, the owners of which, though they could not be persuaded to part with them, would willingly spare them for a few months for a public object.
> "The question of one, two, or three exhibitions in consecutive years, would, I apprehend, be mainly decided by the result of future inquiries as to the probable number of pictures which could be obtained, and the space which could be found for their exhibition. But whether the period over which each exhibition (if more than one) should range be longer or shorter, the point on which I should set the greatest value, in an historical, if not in an artistic point of view, would be the strict maintenance of the chronological series. I shall be very happy if any suggestions of mine should lead the Committee of Council to take up seriously, and carry out, with such alterations of detail as experience might suggest, a scheme which I think could hardly fail of being generally interesting : and I should have much pleasure in placing temporarily at their disposal any portraits from my collection at Knowsley which they might think suitable for their purpose."

The Committee of Advice, as now constituted by my Lords, consists of the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, and the following other noblemen and gentlemen :—

* Are Trustees and † Secretary of the National Portrait Gallery.

Mr. Samuel Redgrave, to whose valuable labours the successful formation of the Collection of Portrait Miniatures is chiefly due, has undertaken the special charge of directing the Exhibition, and Mr. Sketchley will act as Secretary.

By order of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

ARRANGEMENTS APPROVED FOR THE EXHIBITION.

1. The Exhibition is specially designed to illustrate English history, and the progress of art in England. It may be divided into two or three sections, representing distinct historic periods, exhibited in successive years, depending upon the number of the portraits received and the space available for their proper exhibition.

2. It will comprise the portraits of persons of every class who have in any way attained eminence or distinction in England, from the date of the earliest authentic portraits to the present time; but it will not include the portraits of living persons, or portraits of a miniature character.

3. The portraits of foreigners who have attained eminence or distinction in England will also be included, with portraits by foreign artists which represent persons so distinguished.

4. The Exhibition will be held at South Kensington, in the large brick building used for the Refreshment Rooms of the International Exhibition in 1862; and these galleries, which are perfectly dry, will be fitted up especially for the exhibition, and patrolled day and night by the police.

5. All charges for the conveyance of pictures accepted for exhibition by the Committee will be defrayed by the Department of Science and Art.

6. The exhibition will be opened on 15th April, 1868. In order that the portraits may be properly arranged and catalogued, they will be required not later than the Fourteenth of March. They will be returned in the month of August.

7. In accordance with the usual practice, the Science and Art Department, unless the owner objects, will take photographs of the portraits for the purpose of instruction in the Schools of Art, and for sale to the public through the medium of the Arundel Society; but no permission will be granted to any private person to photograph or copy without the owner's express sanction. Two copies of each photograph taken will be presented to the owner of the picture photographed.

8. As was the case at the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862 (and as is usual at the Royal Academy and other exhibitions), the Department cannot be responsible for loss or damage, but every possible care will be taken of works lent; and it may be added, that the numerous paintings lent for exhibition in 1862 were collected and returned by the same agency as will be now employed, free from injury or damage of any kind.

9. All correspondence, marked on the cover "National Portrait Exhibition," should be addressed to the Secretary of the Science and Art Department, South Kensington Museum, London, W.

A FRENCH GENERAL'S TREASON IN THE REVOLUTION.

15.7.14

Major Sir John Hall is publishing in the autumn (Messrs. Smith, Elder) a new work entitled, "General Pichegru's Treason"—the story of the labourer's son who became a general in the wars of the French Revolution, only to sell himself to the Bourbons and end his life in dishonour. For the purpose of this book the publishers are endeavouring to trace the whereabouts of the original of the portrait by Füger of the Right Hon. William Wickham, which was painted at Vienna in 1801, and published with Wickham's correspondence by his grandson in 1870.
